Ramaphosa wasted his first 100 days in power

When he has squandered his ‘Ramaphoria’ period, when his popularity was at its peak and resistance within the ANC against him was at its lowest

William Gumede

This general model ofSnap’s priorities is informed by our analysis of Ramaphosa’s profile as a leader and the political ambiguity of the ANC in the context of the party’s 2022 national conference. It is based on the assumption that Ramaphosa’s initial power was centred on his capacity to resolve the July 2021 crisis, his capacity to lead the ANC to victory in general elections and his capacity to deal with a range of pressing problems, including divisions in his own party, and pull our country out of the mess in which we find ourselves in as a country. He is our commander-in-chief and will have to demonstrate that he is capable of taking the country into a unity of purpose.

The president must act to regain the trust of the people

As the new president of the Republic of South Africa, Cyril Ramaphosa must do more than just be a politician and leader. He must also be a statesman and manager of the country’s economic affairs. If he is to be successful, he must take steps to improve the economic situation of the country and to address the challenges that face it. He must also be a good communicator and be able to make clear and compelling arguments for his policies and actions.

The Ramaphoria period was characterized by a strong sense of optimism and hope, as the country was recovering from the Covid-19 pandemic. However, the Ramaphoria period has now come to an end, and the country is facing a range of serious challenges, including a poor economy, high unemployment, and a lack of job creation. The new president must take steps to address these challenges and to improve the economic situation of the country.

The Ramaphoria period was also characterized by a strong sense of unity and cooperation among the political parties. This unity was reflected in the fact that the ANC and the cooperation were able to work together in the parliament and to agree on a number of important policies and initiatives. The new president must continue this spirit of unity and cooperation and work with all the political parties to address the challenges that face the country.

The Ramaphoria period was also characterized by a strong sense of hope and optimism, as the country was recovering from the Covid-19 pandemic. However, the Ramaphoria period has now come to an end, and the country is facing a range of serious challenges, including a poor economy, high unemployment, and a lack of job creation. The new president must take steps to address these challenges and to improve the economic situation of the country.

The Ramaphoria period was also characterized by a strong sense of unity and cooperation among the political parties. This unity was reflected in the fact that the ANC and the cooperation were able to work together in the parliament and to agree on a number of important policies and initiatives. The new president must continue this spirit of unity and cooperation and work with all the political parties to address the challenges that face the country.

The Ramaphoria period was also characterized by a strong sense of hope and optimism, as the country was recovering from the Covid-19 pandemic. However, the Ramaphoria period has now come to an end, and the country is facing a range of serious challenges, including a poor economy, high unemployment, and a lack of job creation. The new president must take steps to address these challenges and to improve the economic situation of the country.

The Ramaphoria period was also characterized by a strong sense of unity and cooperation among the political parties. This unity was reflected in the fact that the ANC and the cooperation were able to work together in the parliament and to agree on a number of important policies and initiatives. The new president must continue this spirit of unity and cooperation and work with all the political parties to address the challenges that face the country.